FIRST IMPRESSION

By Kevin Falvey

GRADY-WHITE CANYON 266

At first glance, the Grady-White Canyon 266 looks every bit the serious fishing machine, but spend a few minutes aboard and you'll discover that it is also a versatile center-console designed for more than just filling the fish box.

Running on Grady's vaunted SeaV² hull, the Canyon 266 promises the smooth, dry ride required for heading outside the inlet. With a maximum rating of 600 hp from twin Yamaha outboards, the Canyon 266 allows its owner to confidently tackle bluewater conditions while remaining easy to trailer and store.

Fishing features include a 31-gallon livewell integrated into the deluxe leaning post, a 15.5-gallon transom livewell, three insulated fish boxes, abundant rod storage, and a spacious cockpit designed for working fish from bow to stern atop the nonskid sole.

Yet Grady-White hasn't forgotten families. Plush bow seating with adjustable backrests, a foldaway aft bench, an oversized 217-quart cooler beneath the forward console lounge, and a fully enclosed head compartment make long days on the water comfortable for everyone aboard.

Premium touches such as a fiberglass T-top with integrated windshield, digital helm, stainless-steel hardware, and optional Yamaha

Helm Master EX elevate the ownership experience. Whether you're heading offshore before sunrise or enjoying a sunset cruise with friends, the Canyon 266 delivers the blend of performance, comfort, and craftsmanship that many boat buyers currently aspire to. Look for our test coming soon.
